A Narrow Escape.

The Marquis of Hartington tells an episode from war days when the spy scare was at its height, according to a writer in the Halifax Chronicle. Certain confidential information that the military authorities wanted to keep absolutely secret was sent round by trusted couriers in locked despatch boxes, with elaborate precautions of signing and countersigning and checking every stage. No one below the rank of major-general was intrusted with the knowledge, and even these were bound by tremendous oaths of secrecy. After a time it was found that these weighty documents, which were circulated in printed form, were being set up by printers who were under no obligation to preserve secrecy, and, in fact, took no precautions whatever against leakage. However, nothing did leak out, but the military mandarins, it is said, shuddered when they realized the risks that had been run.

The Chaplain Relented.

The chaplain was a Scotsman, who resented any innovation in the service. A generous member of the congregation, thinking it would be desirable to have the lessons read from a lectern instead of the prayer desk, presented the church with a brass eagle.

The minister, however, did not take kindly to it, and declined to use it the first morning, but towards evening he relented somewhat, and at the close of the service he astonished and entertained his congregation by giving out the following: "I give notice that next Sabbath the wurrd o' God will be read from that burrd."

NAVY LEAGUE CAMPAIGN WELL LAUNCHED—REPORTS OF CONTRIBUTIONS FROM ALL OVER THE COUNTY GOOD.

Grand Speech by Capt. Rev. S. Boal, R.N., at Wonderland, Wednesday Evening Raised Enthusiasm to Highest Pitch.

Sailors week campaign of the Navy League of Canada, in the County of Lennox and Addington, is now on in the fullest sense of the word. Reports from the outlying districts of the county, and from town canvassers are most encouraging.

As this will probably be the last campaign for funds for the widows and orphans of the Mercantile Marine Sailors, who laid down their lives for us, every confidence is felt by the Navy League that a more than generous response will be made to this appeal. It is imperative that $14,000 be got in this campaign to complete the endownment fund, the interest on which will provide the necessary amount annually to pay the pensions alloted to the widows and orphans.

Such an excellent editorially appeared in the Toronto Globe of Wednesday, October 20th, that we herewith take the liberty of reproducing it:

FOR SAILORS' DEPENDENTS

"To-morrow the British Empire celebrates Trafalgar Day. Friend and staunch ally of the nation with whom she warred in Nelson's time, Britain will remember with pride and gratitude that throughout the world war the successors of the great Admiral and his fighting crews lived up to the glorious traditions of the past. With her the whole Empire will pay tribute to the men who fought and died from Hefgoland Bight to Jutland, closing the sea against the foe and keeping it wide open for all friends. And in remembering them the Motherland and the overseas dominions will recall with deep gratitude and affection the self sacrificing heroism of the merchant marine.

Canada furnished its quota of the men who manned the cargo boats that kept the Allied armies and the working folk of the Allied lands supplied with the requisites for carrying on. In every peril of weather and the German submarine seas fleet they went their way, and ofttimes it was to death. For their dependents there was no pension fund. No government can such as that provided for the soldier and the man o' war's man. The Navy League of Canada, whose campaign for funds for a work the importance of which cannot be overated is now in progress, has in the past included in care for these dependents in its budget. It now proposes to set aside for relief purposes out of the money raised this week the sum of $144,000. With the trust moneys now in hand this is expected to make it possible to establish an endowment fund, the income from which will render any further appeals for these dependents unnecessary. That is only one phase of the work for which the League is asking public aid. Every Canadian owes it to himself to become acquainted with that work."

There was a very large attendance at Wonderland theatre to see the excellent films which are a regular feature at that house on Wednesday evenings, and also to see the splendid British Government film of the surrender of the German fleet at Scapa Flow.

Preceeding the picture showing the surrender of the German fleet Mrs. Powell kindly gave an excellent recitation, entitled "Pals," then Capt. the Rev. "S. Boal gave a powerful and inspiring lecture on the work, and necessity for the work of the Navy League.

His utterances were listened to with rapt attention, and the splendid points he made were greeted with enthusiastic applause. One point in particular, which enthused his audience, was, that giving all due credit to the assistance of the U.S.A., in the great war, "we, we, meaning the British Navy and the British Mercantile Marine, would have won the war without their help. The talented lecturer gave some very interesting information which has up to now not been published and the writer does not think it wise to repeat that information in print. Amongst the very valuable statistics furnished by Capt. Boal, the following is most worthy of record. Canada's war toll in the Great War was 54,319, killed in action 54,319, missing 8,119, prisoners of war 2218, wounded 149,709. Against this the United States of America lost as follows: killed 49,498, wounded 205,690, prisoners 4480. From these figures it will be seen that Canada, with a population of nearly 9,000,000, lost more men than did the United States with a population of 110,000,000.

Britain lost 2197 ships, 17,000 sailors who left behind them 45,000 widows and orphans unprovided for. It is our duty and privilege, said the speaker, to provide pensions for the dear ones left behind by those gallant seamen who gave their lives that we might live in peace and security.

There are also 23,000 sailors of the Mercantile Marine, who are disabled, for whom the Navy League has to make provision. Capt. Boal made a most insistent and forceful appeal, on the plea of duty, to all Canadians to respond promptly and generously to funds of Navy League during this campaign for the honor of the country and to the Glory of God. He reminded his hearers, in his closing peroration, that each of us would have to give an account of our stewardship at the last great day. Inasmuch, quoted the speaker, as ye have not done it to these, my children, ye have not done it unto me. And the awful penalty: They were hungry and ye gave them no meat. They were athirst and ye gave them no drink. They were naked and ye clothed them not. Depart from me ye cursed.

Capt. Boal's stirring address was followed by a most appropriate recitation entitled, "Inasmuch," given by Mrs. Powell.

Mrs. Powell, by special request of the Lennox and Addington Branch, repeated those two fine pieces at the Strand Theatre last night.

THE NAVY LEAGUE CAMPAIGN

The greatness of a nation depends upon the individual effort of its people. No nation can become great if its people lack the spirit of national greatness. A great nation means a prosperous nation, and the Navy League of Canada in their campaign for $760,000 is endeavoring to make Canada a great nation. Not only does the League look to the future, but in pensioning the widows and orphans of merchant sailors who lost their lives during the war are living up to "British Fair Play" and the tradition of the British Navy.

History shows that the great and wealthy nations of the past achieved power and wealth through a system of internation trade. Their vast fleets of merchantman sailed the known seas of the world and brought to home ports the riches of civilization. The same principles apply to the twentieth century as they did to antiquity.

If Canada is to be the great nation of our hopes and aspirations we must develop a great export trade. This must be borne up on the keels of a vast fleet of Canadian merchantmen, officered and manned by Canadian Sailors, and protected by a Caadian Navy in order to guard our trade channels.

In its campaign to promote national maritime expansion, and to educate the people to the vital necessity of sea power, the Navy League of Canada is laying the foundations of the future greatness and prosperity of the nation. This work is a concentrated effort to promote a wider spirit of Canadianism. A spirit that will send Canadian ships ploughing across the seven seas carrying Canadian goods and commodities to the great marts of the world.

It must be remembered that sea-power decides the fate of nations. A country unable to keep its lines of sea communications intact at all times is sure to suffer defeat at the hands of an enemy.

When the Arsenal Bred Bunnies.

Woolwich Arsenal, which is now engaged in turning out British war medals at the rate of about seventy thousand a week, has served many other strange purposes since its inauguration just over two hundred years ago. Originally it was a royal rabbit warren, where bunnies were bred for the King's table; and for the first century of its existence it was actually known as "the Warren."

Its present name, however, was the Royal Brass Foundry, and here cannon made from this metal or one of its alloys were cast for the navy and army.

There was not enough of this kind of work, however, to keep it going; and small wonder, seeing that in the beginning £5,000 was all that Parliament would allow for a whole year's output of big guns.

So, in order that the workmen should not remain idle, all sorts of brass objects and fittings for the public services were made here, including copper saucepans and kettles for the fleet, and brass buckles of all kinds for the army.

Very large quantities of hempen cordage were also manufactured, and some fluff from this catching fire led, over a century ago, to an outbreak which nearly destroyed the whole arsenal, the damage being estimated at over £200,000.—Pearson's.

SUGAR RING DEFEATED

Public Given Protection by Ottawa Government.

Board of Commerce Made Order Keeping Cheap Sugar Out of Canada, and Maintaining the High Price, But Decree Will Not Go Into Effect Without Further Hearing.

OTTAWA, Oct. 19.—The indignation engendered over the order of the Board of Commerce preventing the importation of sugar from Java, price at 21 cents will be stilled by the action of the Cabinet in passing an order-in-Council suspending the operation until December 20, when a hearing for all concerned will be held.

Before the order of the Board of Commerce, fixing a price and restricting trade in that commodity to purely Canadian channels, has been a day in operation, it was suspended by the Government pending a public hearing by the Cabinet itself of the arguments for and against regulation at the present time. The Government bases its action upon a report by the Minister of Justice expressing his conviction that the Board of Commerce had not statutory power to promulgate such an order. Furthermore, the Minister and the Government hold that the powers conferred upon the board were never intended to be exercised "to restrain for the purpose of fixing or maintaining prices, buyers or sellers of commodities from dealing with the public at large, and to limit them to buying or selling sugar at 21 cents a pound plus freight. It makes the price regulating provisions ineffectual, however, by removing the restrictions on trading and consequently the ban against importation of sugar from the United States.

Premier Meighen was obliged to leave Ottawa to fulfill his engagement in Woodstock before the conclusion of the last interview of the sugar refiners with the members of the Government on Monday night. The refiners desired a definite pledge would prevent importation of cheap sugars from the United States until they had disposed of their stocks and avoided a situation which might cause them heavy losses. They carried their case to the Board of Commerce on Tuesday, and received by its judgment on Wednesday. The Prime Minister arrived in Ottawa on Thursday morning after his fast train dash meeting to learn of the storm of protest aroused by the Board of Commerce order. That judgment was discussed at a meeting of the Cabinet Council, which adjourned early Thursday afternoon. The order-in-Council was adopted, signed by the Governor-General and made public in the evening.

On one previous occasion the Government board an appeal from an order of the Board of Commerce. On that occasion textile manufacturers were the appellants. The Government, however, declined to rescind the board order. On this occasion the Government has acted upon its own motion.

A statement issued by Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen contains the significant declaration that "nothing can be shown to the contrary at the hearing, the order of the board will doubtless then be finally rescinded." The Prime Minister has shown his appreciation of the importance of the issues raised by the application of the Canadian Sugar Refineries for assistance and by the order of the Board of Commerce, by postponing his tour of Western Canada for a week in order to deal with them promptly.

Ships Stay In Port.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—British ships are permitted to take on coal, but none now in port shall leave until further notice, it was announced Friday in connection with the coal miners' embargo on coal due to the strike. The order threw confusion into thousands of Americans here awaiting passage home. They believe they may be stranded indefinitely unless the liners coal in American ports for the round trip. Some confusion was experienced by the nationals of others countries, notably South America.

The Aquitania, an oil burner, leaves with a full load of passengers.

Body Arrives From War Zone.

OTTAWA, Oct. 19.—The body of a United States army soldier who died in France arrived at Ottawa last Friday on the way to Southport, Ont. As far as is known, he is the first body to arrive in Ottawa from the actual war zone. Few particulars accompany the body, which has not been claimed yet. The name on the box is Corpl. Robert L. Holbrook, from U. S. Cemetery No. 295, France. The first address is 29 Pine Street, N.Y., and then on here. The box is draped with a large United States flag, and there are several floral pieces on it.

Saved by Four Votes.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—The Australian Federal Government escaped defeat by only four votes on a country's party motion to reduce the estimates by one million pounds.

The Australian naval estimates just issued provide for the expenditure of £3,266,000, as compared with £2,000,000 before the war. The personnel of the Australian fleet is given as 6,628. Before the war the Australian naval man strength was 3,837.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure catarrhal deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Many cases of deafness are caused by catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure acts through the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Catarrhal Deafness that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Circulars free. All Druggists, 75c.

COAL MINERS WALK OUT

Economic Battle Has Started in England.

Strike Will Affect the Entire Country and the British Government is Making Plans for a Struggle That May Become Almost Revolutionary In Size — Defence of the Realm Act Again In Force.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—The strike of the British coal miners—the greatest economic battle of all times—is an accomplished fact.

Responding to the strikes orders which went to every district of the Miners' Federation, the grimy workers started dropping their tools at noon Saturday and by Sunday noon more than one million men and boys were out.

The bright theatre lights and all other lights that are not absolutely necessary are out at night. London is dark, almost as dark as it was in the days of the wielding Zeppelins. Motors are being mobilized on the transportation of food, should the coal supply of the railroads give out or should the railway men join the strike. British troops are stationed at the strategic points in the coal fields and in the larger cities where there might be danger of the idle thousands turning to mischief. The plan, it is said, is understood, and supported by 3,000 tanks.

Until now the miners stand alone. None of the other great unions have called for their help, but there is somewhat general denunciation from the public. It is considered quite possible, however, that railroad men, at their meeting Wednesday, will declare a sympathetic strike.

If the railroad men decide to strike it would practically force the entire great trade unions to follow, rather than suffer themselves to be weakened by endangering the success of the strike.

Despite the protestations from all sides of the desire for settlement, there was no official action toward that end by the Government, the employers or the miners. The only hope of the public is Premier Lloyd George.

The Commons re-assembles this week and there is the distinct possibility that action may be taken looking toward the renewal of negotiations.

The Parliamentary Labor party will caucus to-decide on its policy. One of its moves will be to insist that the Government distribute to the men the wages contributions paid by the men under the unemployment act during the war. The funds of all of the unions are a trifle less than $100,000,000. They will finance the strike for a full month.

In the meantime the Government is preparing for the worst. Army and navy labor is being mobilized. Work stopped. The police chiefs all over the nation are enlisting volunteers, to be available in every disorder develops. In all areas the leaders of the miners have appealed to their men for discipline and the maintenance of order.

In the absence of any definite signs of peace the plants chiefly dependent on coal are making plans to close down. Within a week it is certain that, including the miners, more than 2,000,000 men will be idle. The first plants to close will be the metal and pottery.

Premier Lloyd George is constantly in touch with all of his Downing Street office, and is ready to listen to proposals from any responsible parties that may lead to the stopping of the strike.

The Defence of the Realm Act, passed for the war emergency, is again in full operation. It is now unlawful for any family to obtain coal if it now has more than half a ton. Factories without coal are permitted a hundred pounds a week. The factories have been limited to the consumption of fifty per cent. of their normal quantity. The use of gas and electricity has been drastically limited. Advertising signs are under the ban. The food controller has issued anti-hoarding warnings, prohibiting the accumulation of more than a week's supply of foodstuffs.

The ration has been cut from twelve to eight ounces.

The strikers, in quitting the mines, left a sufficient number of men to prevent damage to the mines by water or other natural causes. The ... will be kept running. This means that when settlement is effected the men can go to work at once without the delay that might be occasioned by the flooding of the pits.

Raided City Hall.

CORK, Oct. 19.—The first raid on the Cork City Hall since Terence MacSwiney, the Lord Mayor, was arrested last August, took place shortly before noon Thursday when four lorries filled with soldiers, a smaller lorry mounting a Lewis gun, and an armored car drove up and took possession of the building. The raiders remained for more than an hour. They made one arrest, John Sage, a clerk in the Revenue department, on whom they found a ticket for a raffle of a revolver.

Every person in the building was rounded up, and with hands in the air was sent to the corridor on the second floor, where a personal search was made. Meanwhile there was a systematic search of the various department offices.

Officials of the treasury department assert that all records which were private funds, are missing from the safe.

Wanted To Be Safe.

"What is your position on this great question?"

"My position is somewhat like that of a tight-rope walker. I don't want to stop to argue or show off. What I want to do is to get across to solid ground."

The Reason.

"Lillian," said mother, severely, "there were two pieces of cake in the pantry this morning and now there is only one. How does this happen?"

"I don't know," replied Lillian, regretfully. "It must have been so dark that I didn't see the other piece."

SINN FEINERS ACTIVE.

Riots and Deaths in Ireland Over Week End.

DUBLIN, Oct. 19.—Extensive military operations in Dublin, the slaying of two men and a boy, and a renewal of the rioting in Belfast with two deaths, characterized the week end in Ireland.

In Dublin cordons of soldiers were drawn around entire districts and the houses searched. Searching parties of soldiers, reinforced by tanks, went from end to end of several streets searching every home.

In Belfast two civilians were killed when the troops fired on a crowd that was attacking the police. About 50 were wounded in the crowd, made up of Unionists and Nationalists, was fighting, and when the police interfered joined forces against the officers, wounding three.

There was shooting in the streets of Londonderry. Police and soldiers were wounded.

In the south a bridge leading into Limerick was blown up to prevent the concentration of the soldiers along a railroad.

Sergt. Roche, of the Royal Irish Constabulary, who came here Sunday to identify a Sinn Feiner who was killed Thursday, was shot to death a few hours after his arrival. Three civilians were killed also. He took shelter in a doorway and then ran. The three men pursued him for two blocks, shooting at his head. A man and woman in the way of the chase were struck by bullets from Roche's revolver or those of his antagonists.

A military truck was ambushed in County Clare. Three of the soldiers on it were wounded.

Magistrate Moore and Magistrate Hyde, who were captured Friday by Sinn Feiners while motoring to Every Sessions at Tullamore, Ireland, have been released following upon threats of reprisals by the police and military. They were not ill-treated during their detention.

An official report says that while three officers and eight soldiers were proceeding in a boat Sunday on Loughrea, County Galway, they were fired on by a large party of civilians on shore. Two of the officers and one soldier were wounded. The fire was returned with unknown results.

CANADA MUST GIVE AID.

Herbert Hoover Appeals for the Red Cross.

TORONTO, Oct. 19.—"If we are to preserve the foundation—physically, materially and morally—of the future generation of men and women of war stricken areas in Europe and Asia, our duty is clear before us. I bespeak the co-operation of Canada," he said.

Does that sound familiar? Yes," Perhaps you will say it is propaganda carefully prepared for an attack upon your savings after five years of financial giving for war purposes. On the contrary, it is a world-wide message—a direct appeal by Mr. Herbert Hoover, former Food Administrator of the United States, issued from Commercial activities in Toronto. Mr. Hoover's appeal was on behalf of 4,000,000 war-stricken and starving children of Europe. Action and not words impressed the bigness of Mr. Hoover, in the pursuit to which he has turned his endeavors since resigning the Food Administratorship, upon his hearers Saturday night.

It was the fifteenth speech delivered by Mr. Hoover in five days. His visit to Toronto was in connection with the British Empire War Relief Campaign, organized to assist war-stricken areas, and which the Red Cross has pledged to support. Armistice week, November 8 to 15, has been chosen to enable people to contribute to the fund.

LITTLE GIRL MURDERED.

Terrible Tragedy In Western Ontario Village.

POINT EDWARD, Ont., Oct. 19.—Little Dorothy Buchanan, 10-year-old daughter of Mr and Mrs. T. Buchanan of this place, was strangled to death, and in other ways seriously maltreated, by an unknown assassin in Hayden Park Saturday night. The child, who was going through the park to meet her father coming from work on his bicycle, was last seen at 6.30 o'clock. Her self who wanted her to come home with him as it was growing dark. However, she wished to wait for her daddy, as he was buying her a few pairs of shoes. Mr. Buchanan passed through the park at 6.30 o'clock, and seeing no sign of his little daughter, thought that she had grown tired of waiting for him, and gone home. Upon arrival home he learned that the mother was looking for her. After a search of over three hours, in which Patrolmen Leigh and Essons, of the Sarnia Police Force assisted, the mutilated body of the little one was found in shallow water in the adjacent bay by several villagers. Huge black finger marks on the throat also place the cause of death of the slayer. A preliminary inquest was held and no facts were revealed, it being adjourned until Wednesday evening.

A suspicious character who attempted to leave on an early train Sunday was held up, and who slept in a barn near the scene of the crime, was taken in custody by High County Constable Coulter.

A deputation asked Attorney-General Raney to prohibit holding of Irish self-determination League meeting in Ottawa.

HAS NO PAIN NOW

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did for Mrs. Peasey of London.

London, Ont.—"I suffered with periodic pains, was weak and run down, could not eat and had headaches. The worst symptoms were dragging down pains, so bad I sometimes thought I would go crazy and I seemed to be something. I was in this condition for two or three years and could not seem to work. I tried all kinds of remedies and had been treated by physicians, but received no benefit. I found ohs of your advertisement and felt inclined to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it and received results from it, and received the best of health now. I keep my house and go out to work and am like a new woman. I have recommended your Vegetable Compound to my friends, and if these facts will help some poor woman use them as you please."—Mrs. J. F. PEASEY, 200 Hecla Street, London, Ont.

The reason women write such letters to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. and tell their friends how they are helped is that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and happiness into their lives. Freed from illness they want to pass the good news along to other suffering women that they also may be helped.

If there are any complications you do not understand write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, Oct. 19.—With around 3,400 cattle at the Union Stock Yards yesterday, although the receipts were light, the market did not show any improvement; on the other hand, the tendency was all toward lower prices.

There was a fair demand for some good and choice butcher cattle and some heavy steers with weight — that is, 1,000 lbs. and upward.

The butcher cow trade was fairly steady and canners were lower. Bulls were quite steady.

For milch cows and springers the better class were in demand. During a holiday the trading was slow all round, but the general tone was quite encouraging for all classes of cattle for the future, and at the close a good many cattle were left behind. The western cattle were in the yards Jurgens, Gordon, Ince & Co., which men billed through to Buffalo, Lancaster and other points south.

D'Annunzio Is Confident.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—Gabriel d'Annunzio, in command of Fiume, is quoted by the correspondent here of the London Times at that place as saying with respect to the Adriatic situation:

"I shall immediately occupy any territory held now by the Italian army and navy should the Government consent to evacuate it. I have ample force at my disposal to do this, and, besides, it is known positively that the Italian forces occupying the territories of Istria and Dalmatia will refuse to obey the Government and will accept my leadership. In any case I will act as I think fit in view of the news reaches me of the Government's forfeiture.

"In the event I am certain that the Jugo-Slavs attack me, but they will rise as one man and defend Adriatic, supremacy and force the Government to sue for peace."

D'Annunzio is reported by the correspondent to have 6,000 fine troops, thirty airplanes, one dreadnought, two cruisers, five destroyers and ten small craft.

Banquet for Man o' War.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—Whether this is a hotel press agent stunt or not, the fact remains that rumors are afloat to the effect that Man o' War is to be presented at a public banquet in his honor at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Oscar Tschirky, the Waldorf banquet impresario, declares that the big lilts are large enough to transport the horse to the banquet room—and that provision for the banquet will be made so as to entirely satisfy the horse's owner.

It is understood that several prominent racing men have approached the hotel management with the project.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 19. — The most interesting feature of Friday's session of the centenary celebration of the establishment of the Church of England in Canada was the presentation of $25,000 as a parting gift from the Church Missionary Society of England to the Anglican Church of Western Canada. Rev. Cyril Bardsley, missionary secretary of the society, made the presentation, which was received by the Bishop of Saskatchewan on behalf of the church.

"Bloomers" in Hansard

THE Canadian Hansard is wrongly accused of being a dry volume. The diligent reader will find a chuckle or two in nearly every issue. "Bloomers"—the term in this sense is neither sartorial nor floral—happen even in Parliament, and sometimes they find their way into the official record, though oftener they are suppressed by the blushing authors. To these "howlers" (to use another word which is sometimes applied) Mr. McMaster, of Brome, in a speech in French has just contributed a remarkable specimen. Certain members of the Government, he said, were like "the three musketeers in the romance of Victor Hugo." Mr. Lapointe interrupted to remark that it was the romance of Alexander Dumas. "Well, then, of Alexander Dumas—they don't know the difference," went on Mr. McMaster, but he thereupon closed his remarks with some abruptness.

He may take comfort from the fact that other Parliamentarians of long experience have made similar slips. Frank B. Carvell, now chairman of the Dominion Railway Board, once said in the House that he did not wish to "rehash old sores." Hon. George P. Graham is credited with remarking: "Let us begin de novo, as they say in Quebec," and on another occasion he convulsed the Commons by a reference to "drying up the bowels of compassion." Then there was Francis McCrea, of Sudbury, who, in speaking of certain horses, called them "pieces of furniture of goods," his first impulse evidently being to call them furniture, and his correction not much of an improvement. A. B. Copp, of Westmoreland, a couple of years ago assured the House that a lobster catch had "decreased over one hundred per cent," which some arithmetical genius figured out to mean a restocking of the waters. But Hansard obligingly substituted the general term "enormously" for the percentage which Mr. Copp had cited.

D. D. McKenzie, of Cape Breton, handles the English language with skill, and has a genius for reparee which sometimes embarrasses his opponents, but when, on one occasion, he said of certain people that "some are dead and some have died" there was general merriment in the House. Only the other day Mr. McKenzie, who is, of course, of Scottish descent, told how, in his boyhood days, there was no need of cadet corps (for which the House was voting estimates), and, added he, "there was no petticoat business as there is with the organization that is spoken of now." This reference to girl cadets was rather skilfully twisted by Gen. Griesbach, who gravely remarked that he was not of Scottish descent, but nevertheless resented Mr. McKenzie's reference to a garment which was certainly not a petticoat although it looked like one. From all of which it may be gathered that Parliament sometimes wears a broad smile. And, as a matter of fact, these little interludes help to relieve a monotony which Parliamentarians sometimes find to be almost unbearable. With the House at high tension and a bitterly contentious subject under debate, somebody's unconscious "bloomer" has been known before now to relieve the pressure and tide over an ugly situation.—The Toronto Star.

A Circus Romance.

How a farmer boy from Lobo, Ontario, near London, started with a pug dog as his performing property and worked up to the ownership of a $1,500,000 circus property, will be related by the biographers of Al. G. Barnes, proprietor of the animal circus that bears his name. Moreover, Barnes has never owed nor borrowed a dollar and has weathered the storms of adversity with the resources that he has developed by his own ability and energy.

He started when he was sixteen touring the Ontario and Michigan lumber camps with a pug dog which he had trained to do many astonishing tricks. Then he added a greyhound to his list; then a pony and so on until now he claims he has the largest animal show in the world. He has many relatives living around Sarnia, London, Brantford and the Canadian Soo.

Of his squad of clowns about ninety per cent. saw war service and one of them, Bunt Cohn, holds the Victoria Cross, the French Croix de Guirre and the Belgian Star.

England's First Elephant.

The first instance of an elephant being brought to the west was in the year 807, when the Caliph Haroun al Rashid presented one to Charlemagne, says Answers.

It was not until 1255, however, that this well known and sagacious animal came to England, and it was in that year that the King of France made King Henry III. a gift of one ten years of age. It arrived at Sandwich, and was then taken to the Tower of London, where, by the king's command, a house had been built for it. Ten feet high to the top of its back, England's first elephant lived to the age of forty-one years. Its keeper was Joan Gosch.

An elephant's skin is generally of a deep ash-brown, but sometimes it is white or cream-colored. The latter variety is very valuable and highly prized, being one of the attributes of royalty in Siam. One of the titles of the King of Siam, by the way, is "Lord of the White Elephant."

Whilst on the subject, it is interesting to find that in many parts of India elephants have been appointed official executioners of justice. They will break the limbs of a criminal, trample him to death, or pierce him with their tusks, according to their master's instructions.

Crime Wave in England Has Caused Authorities To Introduce Flogging

FROM now on British criminals sentenced for crimes which do not call for capital punishment will have to face the possibility of being flogged as well as imprisoned. In technical language, they may get the "cat."

In the last six months or so there have been a number of hysterical newspaper outbursts regarding an alleged "crime wave" in England. These have led to a revival of sentiment—it is impossible to say how numerous are the supporters — in favor of sentencing convicted criminals to a certain amount of flogging, in addition to the usual penalties of fine and imprisonment.

The first case in point arose some week ago, when two men were sentenced for trying to rob a post office, in the course of which attempt they thoroughly terrified the two women clerks on duty at the time. The judge, at the trial, gave them five years' penal servitude, and, in addition, ordered that they receive twenty strokes of the "cat."

The two men appealed from the decision to the Court of Criminal Appeal, which, however, upheld the original sentence, when the Lord Chief Justice, Lord Reading, gave the opinion that:

"The judge who passed the sentence intended to impose an exemplary sentence as a deterrent to others, and more especially imposed the sentence of the 'cat' with the object of deterring persons from committing these very serious offenses."

Lord Beverbrook's paper, the London Express, heartily supports the principle of flogging. Referring to the decision in the case the paper says:

"It is a very proper view for the bench to take. Very possibly, as the result of five years of war, during which the value of human life was depreciated and moral standards upset, there are now preying upon society a number of desperate criminals who do not hesitate to take life in order to accomplish their ends.

"Only the judges who administer the law can end this state of things. They must make their punishments fit the crime; violence must be met with violence, the bully must be cowed. Mere imprisonment will not serve; the 'cat' must play its part. The marked effect of the too rare application of the 'cat' has proved the proper course of justice."

Who Was Chippendale?

In announcements of the numerous furniture sales which are taking place all over the country one finds prominence given to articles by Chippendale. Who was Chippendale? asks Tit-Bits.

Almost all the mahogany of the eighteenth century is vaguely assigned to that illustrious designer, Thomas Chippendale, who, as a matter of fact, was not in the zenith of his vogue until 1760.

Chippendale established himself at a house in St. Martin's lane, London, as a cabinetmaker. His style was heavier in technique and less severe in decoration than those who came after him.

He published a volume of designs for furniture in 1754, which he called "The Gentleman and Cabinetmaker's Director." This work ran to three editions, and at the time it must have been impossible to foresee the coming triumphs of Heppelwhite and Sheraton, who superseded him.

The latter was born in 1751, and thus was a boy of nine when Chippendale was in his glory. Brought up without regular education, Sheraton taught himself the elements of geometry and drawing.

Like Chippendale, he, too, was a cabinetmaker, but seems to have met with little success in that calling. But as a designer of furniture his influence made itself felt almost immediately. His designs were regarded with extraordinary respect, but, none the less, they proved financial failures, and Sheraton lived and died a poor man.

The word "Chippendale" is constantly on the lips of people who have the very vaguest notions as to whether there ever was such a person in the world as Thomas Chippendale.

THOSE SEVEN SEAS.

Are No Better Known Than Nine Points of Law.

Which are the Seven Seas? This is an expression as old as Shakespeare, yet even to-day nobody is quite sure about the seventh. Anybody can name six — the Atlantic, Pacific, Arctic, Antarctic, and Indian Oceans, and the Mediterranean Sea —but there has always been a doubt whether the seventh was the Baltic or the North Sea. The expression "the Seven Seas" is really another way of saying all the world.

What were the Seven Wonders of the World? This question can be answered in rhyme—

The Pyramids first, which in Egypt were laid;
Next Babylon's garden, for Amytis made;
Then Mausolos's tomb of affection and guilt;
Fourth, the Temple of Diana, in Ephesus built;
The Colossus of Rhodes, cast in brass, to the Sun;
Sixth, Jupiter's statue, by Phydias done;
The Pharos of Egypt, last wonder of old.
Or the Palace of Cyprus, cemented with gold.

It appears that, as in the case of the Seven Seas, only six wonders were agreed upon universally, opinion being divided as to which constituted the seventh.

What are the Nine Points of the Law? It has been said that success in litigation requires a good deal of patience, a good deal of money, a good cause, a good lawyer, a good counsel, good witnesses, a good jury, a good judge, and, last, a part of the proverb which says that "possession is nine points of the law," and that anybody is welcome to the tenth if they can get anything out of it.

When you have answered these number-puzzles it will be a little change to attempt to recite the Ten Commandments, and to name the Twelve Apostles, the Four Evangelists, and the Twelve Minor Prophets. —Tit-Bits.

"O hear us when we cry to Thee For those in peril on the sea!"

Have you ever been at sea in a storm and seen the clouds lowering, the wind rising and the waves running mountains high, decks treacherous and the crew anxious? Unless you have, you cannot imagine its awful majesty, or the courage it calls up and the spirit it commands in men.

Many Canadians Have Never Seen the Sea—

Yet the sea is Canada's World-Trade highway. The sea and the Merchant Sailors make us prosperous.

But the Merchant Seaman's life is hard and perilous. He wages continuous battle against the forces of nature. The real sailor is not the deck steward or attendant on comfortable ocean liners. His ship is no floating palace. His voyage no pleasure trip.

The Real Sailor's Ship is the Tramp Steamer—or Windjammer, beating against gales—decks awash—sleep a stranger for days and nights on end. Frozen in winter, dodging icebergs in spring, groping through fogs off treacherous banks, beating round the Horn, fighting through typhoons, or becalmed in the Yellow Sea. Tough going all the way.

Death Always Hovers Over the Wheel—

Is it any wonder, then, that the Navy League wants to make life comfortable for our sailors when ashore? After all, Canada is their home; and the home, while they are here, of the sailors of other lands. The Navy League endows, maintains or assists in maintaining every Sailor's Home, Institute and Welfare Society in Canada. And every dollar subscribed for the maintenance of these Homes and Institutes will be money well invested, and redound to our national prosperity.

The Sea is Our Heritage and Our Strength—

In proportion as we develop this Sea-Conscious Spirit so shall we advance in world civilization and trade. We can only develop our Sea-Conscious Spirit, by making life more endurable to Canadian Sailors. And it is for this purpose that a portion of the Navy League's Fund is set aside. To carry on its work next year, the Navy League must have $760,000. This money must be raised next week. It is not a large amount and borne in proportion from Coast to Coast it must surely be subscribed.

The Navy League of Canada

SAILORS' WEEK CAMPAIGN

October 18—23. Dominion Objective $760,000.

The work of the Navy League is—to enlighten people upon the importance of the sea; so that Canadian products may be shipped, through Canadian ports, in Canadian ships, officered and manned by trained Canadians.

to encourage and to undertake the training of Canadian lads to man Canada's Navy and Mercantile Marine.

to formulate a fundamentally sound policy for the training of our present sea-faring population, to meet an emergency, so that Canadian overseas commerce will be adequately protected.

to support facilities for making the Sailor's life ashore endurable.

to provide for dependents of those who died to protect Canada, Nationally, Imperially and Commercially.

These objects can only be achieved through an organization representative of public responsibility and outside party politics.

"DUCHESS" STOLEN.

Thieves Restored Picture They Could Not Sell.

There are many masterpieces on the walls of the Royal Academy in London this year, but their newness will probably not be a sufficient bait for the picture stealer, who likes something "old and crusted," as a rule, with a pedigree and a price that runs to five figures, says Answers.

There are always collectors who are ready to buy a painting they want without being too inquisitive as to how the seller came into possession of it. Some collectors have even been known to become thieves, so great is their craving to own certain works of art. Though what use such possession can be to them is difficult to imagine, since they must always remain hidden away through fear of detection.

Undoubtedly the most sensational theft in the history of art in England was that of Gainsborough's famous "Duchess of Devonshire," known to everybody by innumerable reproductions.

This masterpiece by one of England's greatest painters was offered at Christie's saleroom in King street, St. James, where the Red Cross sale was recently held, for 10,000 guineas. This was in May, 1876.

Some days later the picture was placed on exhibition in a Bond street gallery, and on May 26, when the place was reopened, it was found that the famous "Duchess" had disappeared. The picture had been cut out of its frame with a knife, the edges of the canvas being left in the empty frame.

For twenty-five years the affair remained a mystery, and it was feared that the picture was gone forever. At least, so the public thought, although there were some who knew otherwise. But whether it would ever be restored was in doubt to the very last.

The chief thief was a hyphenated German-American, named Adam Wirth, a clever crook. His helper was a man twice his bulk, an Englishman named Jack Phillips.

Being a small man, Wirth had climbed on Phillips' shoulders. The night was dark and Bond street silent. By means of the awning, the German reached the window ledge on the first floor, and gained an entrance to the gallery. There he carefully cut the picture from its frame, rolled it up, and departed by the way he had come.

But the masterpiece was no use to him. It was known to dealers in every city. To show it was to give the game away. Wirth got into touch with some solicitors, and held the picture to ransom.

The owners refused to compound a felony, so Wirth put the painting into a tin tube and built it into the wall of his cellar, where it lay hidden until the year 1901, when the world was surprised to hear that the lost "Duchess" was found and that a reward of £20,000 had been paid. The man through whose "good offices" the picture was restored was "Pat" Sheedy, a man of international notoriety. So, after a lapse of twenty-five years, the picture was again restored to the public.

The Late Mrs. Lanphier.

On Sept. 27th, death claimed an esteemed citizen in the person of Mrs. Catherine Helen Lanphier, youngest daughter of the late Capt. James Pearsall. She was born Sept. 6th, 1838, and had spent all of her life on a farm in Richmond, which in the pioneer days was granted to her father in recognition of his service to his country, during the war of 1812, being in command of the Queen's Own regiment. Deceased was a great lover of home and country, a devout member of the Church of England and up to the time of her death enjoyed good health and took a keen delight in conversing on all leading topics of the day, always endeavoring to improve each fleeting moment, lending a helping hand to the needy, she led a very useful life. Especially was she devoted to the cause of freedom in the recent great war, giving her all freely, never complaining only that she could not do more. The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. J. J. Coleman, and the remains laid to rest in the family plot in Riverside cemetery Sept. 29th, 1920.

BUILDING UP A DAIRY HERD.

There are two fundamental points to bear in mind particularly in starting to build up a good, healthy, productive dairy herd. First to see that the best females possible, of the particular breed which you choose to work with, are procured for a foundation. They should have plenty of size, good, robust constitutions, carrying good dairy characteristics. They should be procured from good healthy herds which are under regular inspection, and should be from dams and sires that have shown good results both as to the quality and quantity of milk produced. It is much preferable to have two or three really good individuals to start with than to start with a larger number not up to the standard. The sire to be used in building up a herd is a very important factor also, as the sire is always considered over 50 per cent. of the herd. As we said in regard to females, the sire should come from a good healthy herd with record of performance behind him, having sufficient size, and carrying all the strong characteristics of the breed which he represents.

Secondly, after having a foundation laid, the next step is to see that proper quarters are provided for the housing of the herd, that is, a stable having plenty of light and ventilation. The herd should also be supplied with the proper food to develop them and to produce the largest amount of the best quality of milk at the cheapest price possible.

Another important point is the attention given to the rearing of the young calves. The following method has proven very satisfactory : Remove the dairy calf at birth. Do not allow him to nurse. Give mother's milk at the rate of 8 to 10 pounds, divided into three feeds, for the first ten days, then start replacing with skim-milk so that at the age of one month the calf will be receiving 10 pounds of skim-milk with the addition of a small quantity of scalded flax-seed meal. At three weeks of age a small quantity of oats, clover hay and some clean water should be kept before it from this time on and the skim milk should be gradually increased so that by the time the calf is fifteen weeks old it will be receiving from 15 to 20 pounds daily.

Any person starting out to build up a good, profitable dairy herd cannot do so and know what he is about without the use of the Babcock test and scales. The dairy farmer should know just what amount of milk each cow gives throughout the year and the number of pounds of butter fat the milk contains. Anyone who has not followed this practice is bound to get many surprises after following it for a year. The cow that may have been considered one of the best producers in the herd may be found to be not doing more than paying her board. Cow testing not only produces better cows, but enables the dairyman to feed more intelligently. Get rid of the poor cows, carefully feed the good ones, breed them to a pure-bred sire, and the result will certainly be a large-producing and profitable dairy herd.

FASHIONS IN BRIEF

Colored embroidery on white collar and cuffs makes a dainty finish for wash dresses for little folks.

Panniers caught up in puffs add the necessary bouffant effect on some of the newest skirt models.

Loose-legged Mexican boots of soft tan leather are a correct accompaniment of the sport costume.

Ivory, amber and tortoise-shell are a few of the expensive hounts that are shown for small bags of elegance.

Pink crepe narrowly hemmed with black satin and embroidered in black satin leaves is one of the newer effects in lingerie that appeals to those seeking the unusual.

Elaborate handkerchiefs adorned with real lace and handwork of drawn thread are a necessary accessory, following the arrival of gorgeous ostrich fans.

The Spanish note continues predominant in fashions for evening gowns, and the woman who possesses old Chantilly lace is fortunate as well as entirely in the mode if she chooses to take advantage of her opportunity to achieve a beautiful evening frock.

GRAY NOW FAVORITE COLOR

Shade Reported to Be Rapidly Replacing Tan in Paris—Striped Goods Extensively Used.

Gray as a color for suitings is rapidly replacing tan in favor in Paris. From the yardage point of view, however, wools in tan color, both in mixtures, in plain and in striped or plaid-ed effects, are still big sellers. Navy blue is also much in demand in gabardine serge and poplin. Fancy bures in bright yellow, in rose and in green are in demand for sport coats. Yellow bure marked off in two-inch squares by one-quarter-inch stripes of black are popular, notably for sport coats. This same treatment of black lines used to mark off two-inch squares is also noted on gray grounds and on beige colored grounds, says the Dry Goods Economist.

Striped goods, notably neutral grounds striped in darker tone or in brilliant color, such as yellow, scarlet, blue or bright green, are extensively used for skirts worn with jackets in the plain color of the ground. Large checked effects in the same color combinations, namely of a neutral ground marked off into large squares by colored stripes, are also used in skirt and jacket suits in which the skirt is of the checked material, the jacket of the plain.

Scotch plaided coatings and bold checked materials usually in horse blanket plaid effects are very strong and are extensively used for coats.

IN THE MILLINERY WINDOWS

Gay Colors Are Decidedly Stylish; Entire Hats Are Developed in Vivid Shades.

Bright colors are decidedly the thing in the millinery world. Entire hats developed in vivid shades are popular and the gayest of trimmings appear on hats in dark colors.

A ribbon hat seen recently in one of the smartest of the millinery shops is worth describing. The hat frame, a very small crown, was nearly covered with ribbon and across the top was laid a double fold of the ribbon, extending like the loops of a big bow to the tip of the ear on each side, and drooping a trifle in the back so that the hat foundation or crown was completely concealed. In front a little garland of flowers formed a framing for the face. The ribbon was in dull bronze color and the flowers varicolored.

Fabric hats are very highly regarded this season by the best millinery houses. A great deal of taffeta is being shown and ribbon is a very important hat material.

For real summer wear the big transparent hats of hair braid or mulines promise to be great favorites. The old-fashioned leghorn is again with us flower or ribbon trimmed. For sports wear angora hats are now being brought out, to be matched exactly in sweaters, the two forming very attractive accompaniments for the all white summer sport skirt.

Has Interesting Sash.

A lingerie frock, just arrived from Paris, has an interesting sash. It is very simple ; the beauty lying entirely in the coloring. Ordinary mercerized cotton threads such as are used for embroidery are dyed in faded looking shades of purple, red, blue and orange. These strands are then twisted into a long girdle which is knotted about the waist of the pure white, straight-line frock.

Power Shortage on Trent System

The shortage of power is entirely due to the lack of sufficient water, the control of which is vested in the Federal authorities. If the water which is stored in the Kawartha Lakes is not drawn on, the only relief will be from rainfalls.

The average monthly amounts of power supplied from the Central Ontario System during the summer of 1920 are considerably less than the amounts supplied in the corresponding months of 1918 and since the end of 1918 a new 5000 horse power unit has been placed in operation at Healy Falls. No power is being obtained from this unit at the present time because the natural flow of the Trent River is obstructed. The total capacity of the generating stations on the Central Ontario System exceeds by a large margin the total demand which it has ever been called upon to supply and a new 10,000 horse power developement is under construction at Ranney Falls.

During the month of September the level of the water in three of the main lakes of the Trent Canal System was raised by holding back part of the natural flow. The amount of the water thus stored would, if it had been permitted to flow, have entirely prevented any power shortage.

The Commissioin is conserving the supply to the utmost of its ability and is distributing the amount of power available in the most equitable manner.

Consumers are Asked to aid the Commission as far as they can to make the quantity of power available go as far as possible. Do not use current unnecessarily, put away the electric heater, use household appliances only when really needed, turn out lamps when not required, use small lamps instead of large, where you can, restrict the use of electric signs and display lighting ; in the factory do not permit motors to drive idle shafting and belting, stop motors when they are not driving producing machines.

Complete Co-Operation

will go a long way towards reducing the shortage. The Commission wishes to thank all of its customers who have so loyally worked with it in meeting the present emergency and feels confident that every customer will do his part in making the present limited supply available to all.

MASSE CAN HANDLE DOUBLE WORK NOW

Says His Old Time Strength and Energy Have Returned Since Taking Tanlac.

"Tanlac has built me up so that I can now handle about double the work I used to," declared Oswald Masse, expressman for the J. B. Baillargeon Express Co., and living at 45 Elizabeth street, Montreal.

"I could not eat meat or vegetables without being blonied up as tight as a drum with gas afterwards. I had to live on cereals most of the time. My appetite was gone and I was growing weaker every day. My nerves were all on edge, I could not sleep well and often had night sweats. I had a pain in the small of my back and grew so weak I could hardly get through with my work.

"A druggist suggested my trying Tanlac, and very soon my appetite returned and I can now eat meat, vegetables or anything else and never have indigestion or gas afterwards. My nerves are steady and I enjoy good rest without being troubled with night-sweats. The pain in my back has disappeared and I am stronger and better in every way."

Tanlac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store. Also in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON.

BANK JOBS GO BEGGING.

Serious Shortage In Clerks Worrying the Managers.

Think of it, our once-exclusive banks are hanging out cards asking for clerks, just as factories do when they want help. Neat little placard in this connection are hung up near the tellers' cages. Hark to the contents of one of them:

"Employment on the staff of this bank offers an attractive future for young men. We are in a position to place a number of boys with High School education at our different branches throughout Canada.

"For particulars please refer to the manager."

Can't you imagine one of Canada's bygone general managers, pompous of mien, revisiting old haunts and nearly having an apoplectic fit at the sight of such a placard. Advertising for clerks!. The very idea! Twenty years ago or more such an expedient would never have been dreamed of. Why, there was keen competition to get jobs in banks. In those distant days of Canada's hard times banks had waiting lists just like modern golf clubs, and picked and chose the young men who were to have the privilege of working for them. Applicants for positions approached a manager in humility and awe.

Not only good appearance, but social pull was necessary for admittance to one of the larger institutions. A boy's ancestry looomed larger with some general managers than did his penmanship. A bank job was the goal of most youths whose parents could get afford them a profession. For the post was a sure thing—banks never actually firing their clerks — and promotion, though slow, was regular up to a point, at least. Moreover — afraid that appeal to snobbishness—a bank clerk was some pumpkins socially in the city, and in the country towns he was absolutely IT. But that was twenty years ago.

Junior clerks started their career of finance in those days with as little as $150 a year. To-day bank juniors are hard to get at $600 and $700 a year. And they have adding machines to do the dirty work. Twenty years ago—yes, less than fifteen years ago branch managers with long service, several clerks under them and heavy responsibility, frequently received per annum no more than street car conductors and motormen are rejecting as insufficient to-day. Ask any senior bank man.

About fifteen years ago the native supply of bank clerks began to peter out in Canada. Better times had come with the opening up of the West, and opportunities offered in the professions and other occupations for young Canadians. The demand for clerks rose simultaneously with the shortage, as new branches were springing up on the prairie overnight, like mushrooms. One or two large banks began importing clerks from Scotland, which has since furnished Canada with hundreds of hard-head bankers.

The outbreak of war made the situation more stringent. Girls, whom banks had mostly employed as stenographers or at work which did not bring them into contact with the public, presently appeared at tasks hitherto considered unsuitable for feminine endurance. To-day they run the big deposit ledgers and in some country offices even that nerve-wrecking post, the cash, where she might have to use the loaded revolver lying ready at her side to defend the money from robbers. Some girls receive $1,200 and $1,500 a year in banks.

One Canadian bank has opened no less than 200 new branches within the past two years. Two or three of the larger institutions have from 400 to 500 branches each. All of which illustrates the growth of Canadian banking and the opportunities it offers.

DISTRESS IN EUROPE

British Empire Effort to Help Smaller Nations.

Canadian Red Cross to Organize Appeal on Behalf of Orphans—Call to Be Made In Armistice Week.

An urgent appeal for aid to combat the widespread disease and distress in the war-stricken areas in Europe has been made by the League of Red Cross Societies to the nations which have suffered least from the war. In response a War Relief Fund has been undertaken in Great Britain with an Empire-wide appeal for contributions. The Fund is under the immediate patronage of His Majesty the King and has the support of all parts of the Empire.

His Excellency, the Governor-General of Canada, having received communications from London upon this matter, consulted the Prime Minister, and with his approval referred the question to the Canadian Red Cross Society, and it was arranged for an appeal to be made in Canada during Armistice week in November. The Fund will be known as "The British Empire War Relief Fund."

To Make Known the Need.

The Canadian Red Cross Society accepted the task of making this appeal known throughout Canada only in view of the relentless circumstances and the humane desire to help to alleviate the terrible suffering of a large number of peoples. The reasons are numerous and compelling. Large populations are suffering from distress and disease. Millions of innocent children are among them. Even in time of peace great numbers of their people lived close to the bread line. The war drained them of all their surplus resources.

Through the years of strife they were denied all but the barest necessities, and their condition now is pitiful indeed. History has repeated itself. The diseases which took such fearful toll of human life after the Thirty Years' War, the Seven Years War (1757-65), and the Napoleonic Wars are again widespread, and now there are millions of people in Galicia, Poland, Jugo-Slavia and Roumania who, in addition to being poverty stricken, are in the direst misery and despair on account of disease. In some twelve countries, most of which were either our Allies or friendly to the Allied cause, modern civilization is faced with the inevitable consequences of a great war through partial famine and pestilence.

A Previous Epidemic.

That the epidemic is now one of alarming proportions and terrible in its effect may be noted from the following quotation from "The Times":

"At present the worst results of typhus are confined to Galicia, where the schools are closed, business is at a standstill, and civic life is crippled. The whole community is faced with starvation, whilst the absence of clothing and drugs makes it impossible for the authorities to make any headway against the epidemic. Here we have a country into which the ideas of modern sanitation has never penetrated; for the most part there is no water supply in the smaller towns and villages save wells, whilst the word of sewerage is unknown, gullies running through the streets. There are no doctors, no nurses, and no beds, and the miserable typhus-stricken patients lie unattended on the bare floor. Throughout the rural districts whole families exist in miserable communal huts, their diet consisting of starvation rations of potatoes and beet, both bread and meat being luxuries rarely seen. In almost every hut there are several cases of typhus and in many instances whole families are stricken with the disease, and are perforce left to die unattended."

Many Countries Are Suffering.

What is said of Galicia is true of other countries of Europe, such as Esthonia, Lithuania, Latvia, huge territories of the Ukraine, Soviet Russia, Jugo-Slavia and Czecho-Slovakia. Nor is typhus the only affliction. Tuberculosis, smallpox, dysentery and relapsing fever are also ravaging large areas.

Lack of Medical Aid.

These terrible conditions have been called to the attention of the people of the British Empire in a statement by the Right Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, who, speaking for the Council of the League of Nations, says:

"Men, women and children are dying by thousands, and over vast and civilized areas there are neither medical appliances nor medical skill sufficient to cope with the horrors by which we are faced. Governments have in certain cases done all in their power to bring relief, but there remains a vast field for charitable enterprise which can be dealt with only by voluntary effort."

Eleven Million Orphans.

Dr. Livingstone Farrand, chairman of the Central Committee of the American Red Cross, who has just returned from Europe, states that there are 11,000,000 fatherless children in Europe who face the next few years without hope of adequate care, unless outside assistance is given.

For Suffering Children.

No stronger call could be made to humanity than that of suffering children, and on their behalf particularly the Canadian Red Cross will appeal throughout Canada during Armistice week. Each provincial division of the Red Cross will have charge of the arrangements in its own province, and all Red Cross workers should put themselves into touch immediately with their local branch or with the Headquarters of the Provincial Division if no local branch is organized.

Japs Plan to Build Planes.

Nagoya is destined to become the centre of Japanese aviation, according to a translation from the Osaka Mainichi Shimbun. The army machine works, now under construction at Chikusa, a suburb of Nagoya, will be partially completed and in operation, it is expected, by the beginning of this month, at which time the Atsuta airplane factory will be removed to the same place. In this factory seven powerful motors of the Salmson type are under construction, which, while nominally of 230 h.p., actually develope 250 h.p. The material used is wholly Japanese, and the results of tests are reported to be most satisfactory.

POETRY ON WINDOWS.

Famous Men Scratched Verses on Glass.

From time to time, rhymes scratched on window panes or written on walls, are brought to light, says the Edinburgh Scotsman. These are to be found up and down the country in ancient inn or feudal castle, in humble cottage or lordly hall. It would be a pity, in these days when the road has become more popular than at any time since the advent of railways, if some wanderer, afoot or awheel, does not take the trouble to collect and preserve them. At odd times, the transcript of one of these rhymes appears in the newspapers, there is a two days' wonder in the correspondence column, and then the matter is laid to rest.

The most recent is that discovered at the historic Head inn of Kirkcudbright. In the course of renovations, the following lines, written on one of the walls were uncovered, unfortunately partially obliterated in the process:

When January winds are blawin' cauld,
* * * I took my way;
But mirksome night did me enfauld,
* * * till earlyest day.
—R. Burns.

In one of the ground floor windows of Moreton Hall, in Cheshire, there was scratched in Elizabethan characters, the following rhyme:

A diamond and glasse
For a fule and an asse—

a sentiment which was elaborated by someone into:

When I see a man's name
Scratched upon the glass
I know he owns a diamond
And his father owns an ass.

Poets such as Pope and Burns and great writers such as Swift and Carlyle have not disdained to use the window pane for their rhymes. Swift nearly always left a ding in his verse. Once, while on his way to Ireland, he called at the Four Crosses inn (originally the Three Crosses), a few miles from Rugby. Disliking his reception by the hostess, he wrote these lines on the window with his diamond:

"You have three crosses at your door,
Hang up your wife and you'll have four.

And thus the name of the house was changed. It may have been on the same journey that the dean, arriving at Chester, found that none of the cathedral dignitaries responded to his invitation to sup with him. This was an insult that the hot-headed satirist could not tolerate. He could not retort as he would have wished, so he once more resorted to his diamond and left on the window pane of the Yacht Inn, where he was staying, the following couplet:

Rotten without and mouldering within,
This place and its clergy are nearly akin.

The following lines of Aaron Hill are well known, beginning:

Tender handed stroke a nettle,
And it stings you for your pains,

but not one man in a thousand knows that they were written on a window pane by the poet during a tour in Scotland.

It was at the Black Bull at Moffett, in Dumfriesshire, that Burns left his epigrammatic "Anolory to Scrimpit Nature," on a window pane. Miss Deborah Davies, a beautiful young English woman of small stature, had ridden past, accompanied by a tall and portly lady. The poet was asked why one was so tall and the other so little, and this was his reply:

Ask why God made the gem so small
And why so huge the granite?
Because God meant mankind should see
The higher value on it.

Some years ago there was sold in London a pane of glass from Carlyle's lodgings in Edinburgh, on which the student-philosopher had scratched the following stanza:

Little did my mother think,
That day she cradled me,
What land I was to travel in,
Or what death I should dee.
Oh, foolish thee!

In this connection the following lines are of interest:

While Scotland's sons in every clime
are found
Bearing the banner of their country's fame,
So long will "Sartor's" laurels be renowned,
And honest Scots revere his deathless name.

They were written on a pane of the little old-fashioned window of the house at Ecclefechan, where Carlyle was born.

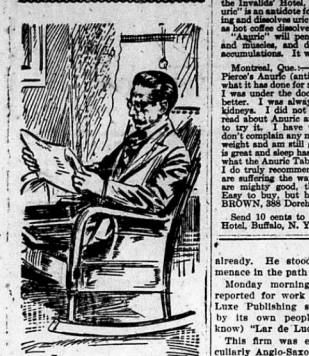
The Thirteenth Commandment

By RUPERT HUGHES

Copyright by Harper & Brothers



Mr. Chivvis Was at Home Most of the Time Now, Sitting About in His Old Clothes to Save the Others.

She applied the next day and the firm accepted her.

Now Daphne was truly a working woman; not a dramatic artist with peculiar hours, but a toiler by the clock. She entered the office of the company at half-past eight, punched her number on the time register, and set to work addressing large envelopes. She wrote and wrote and wrote till twelve; at one she took up her pen again, and she afternoon went in for endless reiteration of dip and write, till five-thirty. Then she joined the home-going panic and took the crowded subway to Columbus circle.

She plodded the treadmill, till at the end of the sixth day, her forty-eighth hour of transcribing names and addresses from the lists to the wrappers, she started off a cash record of eight dollars. This was not clear gain. Her street car fares had totaled sixty cents, her lunches a dollar and a half; she had worn her costumes at the sleeves and damaged them with a few ink spots, and her shoes were taking on a shabby nap.

It was not encouraging.

At Daphne's left elbow was a large, fat girl whose pen rolled off large, fat letters. She talked all the time about nothing of importance, laughed and fidgeted and asked questions that would have been impertinent if they had come from anything but a large, fat head.

Her name was Maria Pribik. She was a Bohemian of the second generation; but she was dyed in the wool with New Yorkishness. She was an incessant optimist and kept reminding everybody to "cheer up, golls, the woist might be woisser yet."

Daphne's luck did not last long. The receivers found that the percentage of inquiries following upon the advertising and circularizing campaigns was hardly paying the postage. People were either too poor to buy books or too busy with the motley history pouring from the caldrons of Europe. Yesterday's paper was ancient history enough.

The receivers closed down the business abruptly on a Saturday and instructed the manager to announce to his flock that there would be no more work at present. Daphne's heart stopped. Here she was again, learning again the dreadful significance of "out of a job"—what the theatrical people called "at liberty."

Miss Pribik looked at Daphne and noted her gloom. "Say, kid, listen here. Why'n't choo come with me? I can land you a job at the Lar de Lucks. Guy name of Goist is the boss and he'll always gimme a job or any lady friend. He's kind of rough, but what's the diff? His money buys just as much as anybody's. We better beat it over there ahead this bunch."

Daphne murmured her hasty thanks and they left at once. Miss Pribik led the way to a huge building full of "Pants Makers," "Nightshirt Makers," "Waist Makers," and publishers of calendars, favors and subscription books. She asked for Mr. Gerst, saw him, beckoned him over, and hailed him with bravado:

"Well, Mist' Goist, here I am, back to the mines. This is me friend Kip. I want you should give her a job—and me, too."

Daphne faced Mr. Gerst's inspection without visible flinching, though she was uneasy within. Gerst was a large, flamboyant brute with eyes that seemed fess to receive light than to send forth vision. He had an inquisitive and stripping gaze. But Daphne must endure it. After ransacking Daphne with his eyes, he grunted: "You look pretty good to me, kiddo. You can begin Monday."

"Thanks," said Daphne, humbly.

"I'm comin', too," said Miss Pribik.

"All right," said Gerst. "It's time you did. We'll take some of that beef off you." And he playfully pinched her arm.

Adroitly evading his pincers, Miss Pribik led the way out, and Daphne trailed her suntide.

Daphne loathed and feared the man already. He stood like a glowering menace in the path ahead of her.

Monday morning at eight Daphne reported for work with the L'Art de Luxe Publishing society, pronounced by its own people (who ought to know) "Lar de Luckie."

This firm was engaged in the peculiarly Anglo-Saxon business of grazing the censorship as closely as possible. It printed everything that it dared to print under the unbelievably Puritanic eye of the law. Toward the authorities it turned the white side of a banner of culture claiming to put in the hands of the people the noblest works of foreign genius and defying any but an impure mind to find impurity in its classic wares. The other side of the banner was purple and informed the customers by every purient innuendo that the books were published in their entirety without expurgation. Vice has its hypocritical cant no less than religion.

One day, toward the end of her first week, she was startled to find before her a card bearing the legend "Duane, Thomas." His address was given, and the facts that he had bought the three-quarter morocco Tom Jones, half-leather Fielding and Smollett, and the levant Count Memoirs. He had not yet taken the bait for the De Maupassant.

Daphne pondered his card and his taste. She was shaken from her pensive mood by the sudden commotion of all the women. All eyes had seen the minute and the hour hands in conjunction at XII. Gowns were left off in the middle; pens fell from poised hands.

Daphne found herself alone. She was glad of the quiet and the solitude, while it lasted—which was not long, for Gerst came back unexpectedly early.

His eye met Daphne's. He started toward her, and then, seeing that she glanced away, went on to his desk. He stood there manifestly irresolute a moment. He glanced at Daphne again, at the fire escapes, at the empty room. Then he went to the first of the tables and with labored carelessness inspected the work of the absentee. He drifted along the aisle toward Daphne, throwing her now and then an interrogative smile that filled her with a fierce anxiety.

She knew his reputation. She had seen his vulgar scuffles with some of the girls, had heard his odious words. She was convinced that he was about to pay her the horrible compliment of his attention.

Her heart began to flutter with fear and wrath. She felt that if he spoke to her she would scream; if he put his hand on her shoulder or her chair she would kill him, with a pair of scissors or the knife with which she scraped off blots. . . . No, she must not kill him. But she would have to strike him on the mouth.

But that meant instant dismissal at the very least. He might smash his fist into her face or her breast or knock her to the floor with the back of his hand. She had seen too much of life recently to cherish longer the pretty myth that the poor are good to the poor. She had seen how shabby women fared with street car conductors and subway guards. She had seen her own prestige dwindle as her clothes lost freshness.

But the violence of Gerst's resentment would be a detail. The horror was the mere thought of his touch.

She rose quickly and tried to reach the fire escape. That was the solution—to join the crowd.

But Gerst filled the aisle. She sidled past two tables into the next aisle. He laughed and sidled across to the same aisle. She tried to hasten by. He put his arms out and snickered:

"What's the rush, girlie? Nobody hollered 'Fire!'"

"Let me pass, please," she mumbled.

"Wait ta minute, wait ta minute. What'd you say if I was to ast you to go to a show tanight, huh? What'd you say?"

"Thank you. I have another— I couldn't."

"S'mother eve, then? Or to a dance, huh?"

"Thank you, I'm afraid I can't."

"Why not? Come on! Why not? Ain't I got class enough for you?"

"Oh yes, but— Please, let me by."

He stared at her, and his hands twitched, and his lips. His eye ran over her face and her bosom as if she were a forbidden text. She was trying to remember what Duane had told her about the way to quell a man. With great difficulty and in all trepidation she parroted her old formula.

"Mr. Gerst, you don't have to flirt with me. I don't expect it, and I don't like it, so please let me go."

He stared at her, trying to understand her amazing foreign language. Then he sniffed with amused unbelief, dropped his hands, and stood aside.

Daphne could hardly believe her eyes. The charm had worked the third time! She darted forward to get away before the spell was broken. As she passed him—whether he suddenly changed his mind or had only pretended to acquiesce—he enveloped her in his arms.

She almost swooned in the onset of fear and the suffocation of his embrace. Then she fought him, striking, scratching, writhing. He crowded her against the nearest table and tried to reach her lips across her left elbow.

Her outflung right hand struck against an inkwell, recognized it as a weapon of a sort, and, clutching it, swept it up and emptied it into his face.

His satyric leer vanished in a black splash. His hands went to his drenched eyes. Daphne, released, dropped the inkwell and fled to the locker-room while he stamped about, howling like the blinded Cyclops. Daphne did not stay to taunt him or to demand her wages. She caught a glimpse of faces at the fire-escape windows, but, hugging her hat and coat, she made good her escape.

Her Outflung Right Hand Struck Against an Inkwell.

She knew what she was escaping from, but not what to.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Daphne scuttered for the subway as a fugitive rabbit to its burrow. But she was not a rabbit and she felt suffocated in the tunnel. She could not endure to be quiet in the presence of so many goggle eyes like aligned buttons. She left the train at the next station and walked rapidly to Fifth avenue and up it bemeaned.

She walked rapidly for the comfort of the restlessness, but there was no comfortable destination ahead of her. She found Mrs. Chevvis at home with her discomposite husband. Daphne dared not tell them just yet that she had lost her place. She would tell them when she got another one. For fear that they might ask why she was home so early, she went down to Bayard's apartment.

She wanted to tell Bayard and Lelia what had happened. It was safe, she felt sure. Bayard would never attack Gerst. He would be more likely to rail at Daphne for bringing the trouble on herself.

Lelia let her in at the door, but she was in a militant humor. She said, "Hello!" grimly and stepped back for Daphne to enter. Daphne found Bayard still aglow with interrupted quarrel. He said, "Hello!" with a dismal connotation.

"What do you suppose that brother of yours orders me to do now?" said Lelia, whirling Daphne toward her.

"I can't imagine," said Daphne, incredulous of Bayard's ordering Lelia to do anything.

"He wants me to go to Dutlih and put up a poor mouth and humiliate myself."

Bayard snatched Daphne to him and stormed: "She bought the clothes, didn't she, without consulting me? She wouldn't send 'em back as you did yours; she wore 'em out, paraded 'em before other men there in Newport while I was slaving here. And now that Dutlih insists on money that I haven't got, and can't get, she won't even go explain it to him. That's all I ask her—to explain it to him and ask him to be patient so that I won't be sued, I can't stand that. I've had every other calamity but I've never been sued for debt. I ask Lelia to go tell him about my hard luck and my fine prospects—play fair with him—and with me. But will she do it? No! She won't do anything for me."

Daphne was swayed by his emotion. She pleaded: "Why don't you, Lelia? You have such winning ways. I'll go with you."

Lelia hesitated, then answered by taking up her hat and slapping it on her head. She paused, took it off again, and went to her room, unhooking her gown as she went; she knew that in asking favors one should wear one's best appearances.

Bayard grumbled. "How are you getting along at your office?"

Daphne felt unable to intrude her own troubles on his. She shrugged her shoulders. It is a kind of white lie, she shrug.

"Hang on to your job as long as you can, old girl, for you'll have to support us all, I guess. You're the only one of us that can get a job or earn a cent. That's the advantage of being a pretty girl."

Daphne was almost moved to tell him some of the disadvantages of being a pretty girl, but she felt that the time was unfit for exploiting her own woes. She ached for some one to disclose them to, but she withheld them.

Lelia came in, arrayed in her very finest. She was smiling in the contentment of beauty at its best. "When you ask credit you've got to look as if you didn't need it," she said.

They found Dutlih in a state of unusual excitement and exhaustion. There were few customers in his place and he left them to the other salespeople. He advanced on Lelia and Daphne and gave a hand to each.

"Why, oh why in the name of Paul Poiret didn't you come in a week ago? The pirates have taken every decent gown I had. The sewing women are working like mad to reproduce 'em, but there's nothing left fit to show, except to Pittsburgh and Plattsburg tourists. Where did you get that awful rag you have on?"

"Hiero," said Lelia.

"Oh, of course I remember. It's beautiful. Sit down. I'm dead. Have a cigarette? Have a cup of tea? Oh, Miss Gerbey—ten for three, please. I didn't forget either of you when I was in Paris. I have a siren gown for you, Mrs. Kip, that will break your heart with joy. You'd murder to get it. And as for you, Miss Kip—well, you'll simply be indecently demure in the one I call 'Innocence.'"

Daphne was a trifle shocked, but Lelia's eyes filled with tears at the mockery of such talk. She moaned: "I didn't come to buy. I came to apologize and beg for mercy. I owe you a lot of money, and I haven't a cent."

"Who has? What of it? Nobody's paying anybody."

"But I had an urgent letter from your bookkeeper, or somebody."

"Don't mind her. She gets excited. Nobody pays me. You come in and get another gown and you'll catch a millionaire with it."

It was hard for Dutlih to keep his clients clear in his memory.

"But I can't afford it."

"And I can't afford to have my children going round in last year's rags. You do as you're told and come around next week. I'll get my money out of you some day. Trust me for that."

Lelia felt a rapturous desire to kiss him and call him names of gratitude. He was generous by impulse and patient, and nobody's fool at that. The thoughts of tailors are long, long thoughts.

Daphne sat thinking, but not of clothes. The labor problem had almost defeminized her. She was studying the models as they lounged about the shop. Suddenly she spoke. "Oh, Mr. Dutlih, how much money does a model earn?"

"You mean what salary do I pay? Common clothes-horses get fifteen or sixteen dollars. Better lookers get better pay. You're worth a thousand a week at least. Want a job?"

"Yes."

His smile was quenched. He studied her across his cup. He saw the anxiety in her curiosity.

"What's the matter?" he said. "Has he run off with another girl, or do you expect to go fishing for a millionaire in my pond?"

"I need the money. I've had hard luck." Daphne said it so solemnly that it grew solemn, too.

"That's too bad! Well, I've got more girls now than I need. Nobody as beautiful as you, of course, but—I suppose I could let some one go."

"Oh, I couldn't think of that!"

"Neither could I. Well, I'll squeeze you in somewhere. But I can't pay you as much as you are worth. Would —umm—twenty dollars a week interest you?"

"It would fascinate me."

"All right, you're engaged. You can begin next Monday." He turned to Lelia. "Do you want a job, too?"

"No, thank you!" Lelia snapped. Her eyes were blacker than ever with rage, and her red-white cheeks curdled with shame. She could not trust herself to speak. Her brunette beauty had the threat of a storm-loaded thundercloud.

When she and Daphne had taken their departure, Lelia still dared not speak to Daphne on the way home. She dared not speak to her at all.

Lelia brought triumph to Bayard. She told him what Dutlih had told her of his willingness to wait for his money.

Bayard embraced Lelia and hailed her as an angel. When she had taken full toll of her penance, she told Bayard what Daphne had done. She told it simply, without emphasis, knowing its effect.

"Daphne!" he roared. "You asked Dutlih for a position among his models? Great Lord of heaven, I'll telegraph father to come take you home."

"That's all right," Daphne taunted. "You'll send the message collect, and he'll never be able to pay for it, so he'll never know what he missed."

"But surely we are not such beggars that—"

"Who has any money? Who has anything left to pawn?"

"But there must be other jobs."

"Get me one."

"There must be some other way."

"Show me."

Clay Wimburn came in after dinner. His protests against Daphne's project were louder than Bayard's, with the added rancour of jealousy. But he had no substitute to offer.

Daphne went to tell him of the Gerst affair. He was deep enough in the mire. He went away a little later and she returned to her cubbyhole with the Chivvises.

Those were black days for all Americs, suffering under the backfire from the sudden war and from the long fatigue of hard times. There were weeks of dread lest the United States be sucked into the maelstrom again, at a time when it was least prepared in money, arms, or spirit. Never, perhaps, in human chronicle had so many people looked with such bewildered misery on so many people locked in such multifarious carnage.

At such a time, as in an epoch of plague, there came a desperate need for distraction. The theatres were darkened in trenches; war widows danced in gay colors; festivals were held in the name of charity; frivolities and vices were resorted to (that good should come) and everywhere for the awful work before them.

It was in such a mood of imperative demand for cheer of some sort that Tom Duane swam back into Daphne's ghetto.

Daphne had come home after a morning of rebuffs. She was heartsore and footsore, in shabby boots that she could not replace. She was in the hall telephone, and Duane's voice chanted in her ear with a tone of peculiarly comforting melancholy.

"That you, Miss Kip? This is me, Mr. Duane. Poor Tom Duane. Poor Tom's coming to town. Tom's coming to town unexpectedly early. I have something important to say to you. Will you take a little ride with me in my car?"

"Why not?" she said, with a laugh. She was glad that he could not see the tears that gushed across her eyelids.

"Three cheers for you! I'll be there in a jiffy. You couldn't arrange to dine with me, could you? Or could you?"

Again she answered, "Why not?"

Duane's voice rang back: "Tip-top! You've made me happy as a box of pups. I'm half-way there already."

CHAPTER XIX.

When Duane came up to the door he greeted her with the beaming joyousness of a rising sun. He praised her and thanked her for lending him her time. The elevator that took their bodies down took her spirits up. She noted that he had not brought his big car with his chauffeur. He stowed her into a powerful roadster built for two. But she had no inclination to protest. The car caught them away and they sped through Central park with thrilling, swooping, sweep.

"The trees!—how wonderful they are!" she cried.

They had been wonderful for weeks, but she had thought them dismal.

"They're nothing to what they are in Westchester," said Duane. "We're going to have a look at them and dine up there somewhere."

"Are we?" was all she said.

And he said, "We are."

After they left the park and reentered the hard streets she found the courage to remind him: "But you said you had something important to tell me. What was it?"

"Miss Kip, you've played the very devil with me. I thought I was immune to the lover germ, but—well, I told you the truth about going abroad to shake off the—the fever—the Daphnitis that attacked me. But I couldn't get you out of my mind for long, or out of my heart at all. I'm a sick man, Miss Kip, a lovesick man."

"Mr. Duane, you mustn't—I can't allow you—really!"

"Oh, yes, you can!" he said, and sent the car ahead with a plunge. "You're going to listen to me for once. You can't help yourself. I'm not going to hurt you. I just want you to help me a little. I went up in the Berkshires and tried to get my sanity back, but I couldn't! I couldn't even play golf—or cards—or drink. People drive me crazy. I can't get interested in anything or anybody but you."

"Mr. Duane, please— You oughtn't to—I beg you. I have no right—"

"Oh, I know you're engaged to Clay Wimburn. He's a nice kid. I'm not one-two-three with him. I'm not trying to cut him out—I couldn't if I would. I like him. I'd like to help him, and your brother, too. I don't mean to be impertinent, either; but—well, the main thing is, I want to beg you to let me see you once in a while."

"I want to take you out riding and dining and dancing and—you can take Wimburn along if you've got to, but I want you to save my life somehow. And, by the Lord Harry! I think it will save yours. You don't look well, my dear—Miss Kip. It breaks my heart to see it. No, I don't believe you're getting as much fun out of life as you ought to. There isn't much fun in the world any more, but what little's left is very precious, and I want you to get all that's going. Won't you let me help you go after it? Won't you?"

They swung up to a height that commanded a vast reach of the Hudson. Between its banks it seemed to be a river of wine. The western sky was like a forest of autumn leaves with the last sad red pitifully beautiful, since it must turn so soon to rust.

In a spirit of haste the fleetly spinning wheels murmured, "Why not, why not, why not, why-notwhynotwhynot?"

Before the sunset had quite relinquished the sky the moon was over the horizon—the harvest moon, huge and close and of a meditative mein. It paled and dwindled as it climbed, but its power seemed to grow.

It left Daphne more alone with Duane, a little afraid of him and of the gloaming. They emerged above the chain of Croton lakes and ran across the big dam and wound along the shore, crossing iron bridge after iron bridge, till they came to a little roadside inn whose lights had a yellow warmth.

"We're stopping here for dinner, if you don't mind," said Duane.

Daphne was a trifle ill at ease, but she was hungry, too, and the adventure was exhilarating. There were not many people at the tables, and they were of an adventurous cast as well.

When Duane had given his order he asked Daphne if she would join the rest of the diners who had left their chairs to fox-trot. She shook her head and he did not urge her.

But by the time their dinner was served and eaten the nagging, interminable music had played away nearly all her scruples.

When Duane looked at her with an appealing smile, she smiled back, nodded and rose. He leaped to his feet and took her in his arms.

Somehow, it was not mere dancing now. He had told her that he loved her. There was in his embrace an eagerness that was full of deference, but full of delight as well. After all, she was alone with him in a company that seemed made up to very respectable, and was growing less so every hour.

Her feet and all her limbs and every muscle of her reveled in the gambol, but her heart and mind and conscience were troubling her that she stopped at last and said:

"I'm sorry, but I—I'd rather not dance any more—here."

POISON LIKE UNTO VENOM OF SNAKES

Professor H. Strauss, M. D., of the Royal Charity Hospital, says, "The cause for an attack of gout, rheumatism, lumbago, is supplied by the increase of uric acid in the blood serum, the result of various causes, the most frequent of which is renal. Before an attack, one suffers sometimes from backache, neuralgia, twinges of pain here and there."

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead, when the back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you have rheumatic pains or lumbago, you can obtain at your nearest drug store "Anuric" (anti-uric-acid).

This is the discovery of Dr. Pierce of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. "Anuric" is an antidote for this uric acid poison-ing and dissolves uric acid in the system as hot coffee dissolves sugar.

"Anuric" will penetrate into the joints and muscles, and dissolve the poisonous accumulations. It will stamp out toxins.

Montreal, Que.:—"I cannot praise Dr. Pierce's Anuric (antiuric-acid) enough for what it has done for me. For three months I was under the doctor's care and got no better. I was always complaining of my kidneys. I did not know what to do. I read about Anuric and made up my mind to try it. I have taken two boxes and don't complain any more. I have gained in weight and am still gaining. My appetite is great and sleep has come to me. That is what the Anuric Tablets have done for me. I do truly recommend them to those who are suffering the way I did. The tablets are mighty good, though not expensive. Easy to buy, but hard to beat."—T. A. BROWN, 388 Dorchester St. W.

Cubs of Polar Bear Take Pneumonia Easily And Die in Warm Climate

THE announcement that two Polar bear cubs were born at the London Zoological Gardens last December aroused widespread interest, notwithstanding the fact that this was an event which has happened several times during the last few years, though so far no cubs have been raised. This reflects no discredit upon the parents, nor upon the management of the zoo, for the same lamentable end has overtaken almost all Polar bear cubs born south of the Arctic regions, while the young of other bears can be raised with relative ease. With each new brace of cubs born in the London Zoo a different method of treatment has been followed, in the hope of averting catastrophe. The mother has been shut up in a warm box, or allowed freedom and given a change of quarters. Hand-rearing and the use of foster-mothers of different animals have each in turn been tried, but in vain. The cubs died.

It has been suggested that this inability on the part of captive Polar bears to raise their offspring is due to the utterly different environment in which the cubs are born. In a wild state the mother makes herself a snow-retreat beneath the snow, the warmth of her body melting a spout hole, or air-shaft, for breathing purposes. She has no need to leave this till the winter is past, for before going into retreat she has amassed a store of fat sufficient for her needs. Here, at an even temperature, her young pass the first few weeks of their existence, to emerge presently to feast upon seal meat.

But even supposing it were possible to reproduce the conditions of the snow chamber, the chances of survival for the youngsters are not very great, as an English authority points out. And this because they appears to be very susceptible to the germs of pneumonia, which find such congenial conditions of existence in our climate, while in the far north the cannot exist. Nor do they find Antarctic a whit more habitable. This much is clear from the records of Polar explorers, who say that colds in the head were unknown save when fresh clothing was unpacked.

All living things normally exposed to the attacks of these microbes have long since acquired a relative immunity thereto by the elimination of the more susceptible and the survival of the resistant.

Spinsters Wear Labels.

In some districts in Siam, a girl who reaches a certain age without finding a husband is required to wear a label, and thenceforth is a more or less privileged person, under the special care of the king, who is bound by ancient custom to find a husband for her. The royal matrimonial bureau has less difficulty in arranging matches than might be expected, for it works on a very simple system. A prisoner in any jail in the kingdom may gain freedom and pardon by marrying one of the king's charges, and as many eagerly take advantage of the right as there are available freedom-bringing maids. Whether or not the man is already married is of no consequence, as one wife is not the limit.

Secret History of Arabian War

I HAVE been reading references to the war in Arabia between the King of the Hejaz—gladiator of the Foreign Office—and the Emir of Nejd—of the India Office—with great interest, since the whole history of the quarrel is before me, and I have wondered how long it would be before the curious ineptitude of policy displayed by his Majesty's Government in permitting this fight would come out in the press.

The King of the Hejaz was invited by us to join the side of the Allies in 1916, and his troops and resources and influence played a part in Allenby's two campaigns against the Turks. His effort in the war exhausted his country, and the nature of the peace settlement—which may be unsatisfactory to the Arabs—has prevented the diversion of forces to defend the Eastern frontier of the Hejaz against the desert.

The Emir of the Desert is Abd ul Aziz ibn Saoud, the strongest personality of the princes of Arabia. He regained the throne of his ancestors some years ago by his own efforts, and has since greatly extended his dominions by becoming at once a political and a religious leader. The ascetic tribes of the desert are always looking for a new creed, and the stern puritanism with which the Wahabi name was associated appealed to the most energetic of them.

They joined his banner in large numbers, reverence him as their Imam, and profess obedience to any order he gives. He sends out quantities of paid missionaries, and has lately been making converts among the hill tribes south of Mecca.

The King of the Hejaz looks on the spread of the new movement with alarm. To the "Brethren"—the name of the devoted in the new sect—he is the great unbeliever, as the chief supporter of the old "High" party among the Moslems, the warden of the twin shrines of Mecca and Medina, and the senior descendant of the Prophet.

The Brethren will not admit to their houses travelers from the Hejaz unless they first wash themselves and leave off their contaminated clothes, and a precept in their creed allows them to kill or enslave Moslems who do not join their sect and abandon tobacco, silk, and precious metals as ornaments.

The Wahabi threat to the Hejaz began in 1917, but was staved off till the end of 1918. King Hussien overestimated his strength and sent against our advice—a column of irregular camel corps against the advance party of the Brethren, who had converted and occupied the village of Khurma, once in the King's hands. The camel corps went unwillingly, since their relatives were in the Wahabi ranks, and almost without fighting gave up their guns and dispersed.

The King was now seriously alarmed, and called his second son, Emir Abdulla, to take command of the expedition against Khurma. Abdulla marched out with a column of 250 Mesopotamian infantry, volunteers for the Arabs army, and some camel corps. The British officers on the spot opposed his going, and he was accompanied, of the foreign military missions in Arabia, only by a French Moslem officer. He won some preliminary successes, but was finally surprised asleep in camp one night, and fled with his mounted men, leaving his 250 infantry behind him, with his guns and machine-guns.

The Wahabis took no prisoners, as usual.

The British Government was now as alarmed as the King of the Hejaz at the apparently imminent fall of Mecca, and made hasty arrangements for the evacuation by sea of the 8,000 British-Indian residents of Mecca. Meanwhile officers were sent out by airplane from England to Egypt to try to persuade the combatants to make peace.

In my opinion Mecca could only be made safe from Nejd by garrisoning its eastern frontier by a regular division. The job was offered to the Government of Feisul in Damascus. Feisul refused, as I knew he would. He had offered to do it when in London at the end of 1918, and had asked for tanks and armored cars for the purpose. There had ensued the usual three-part comedy — the Foreign Office pressing, the War Office wavering, the India Office opposing. Eventually the War Office agreed to supply tanks only to one side—that of Mecca.

Then they began to want their armored cars in Ireland and Egypt—and after six months' correspondence they offered their tanks too late for Feisul's convenience.

The present policy is to try to reconcile the two rulers—a temporary measure, which will not stop a new religion any more than would the delimiting of a frontier by a mixed commission. These outbreaks of puritanism in the desert happen every hundred years or so, by a kind of biological law, and die away after their success, as this one will die away. Unfortunately, sometimes, Moslem opinion demands that their death be hurried, and then a costly expedition, like that of the Egyptian Government a hundred years ago, becomes necessary.

The European Powers, that seem to act as midwives to the new movements of Asia, will be hard put to it to meet such a crisis to-day—unless, of course, they show greater adroitness than they have shown in the last two years and adopt an obvious procedure, urged upon them from several directions, but involving that most difficult thing: Agreement between three Governmental departments.—Col. T. E. Lawrence, in the Toronto Mail and Empire.

Dogs and Blind Men.

Those who remain faithful to the dog as the friend of man, may or may not agree with the following, says the London Mail:

"A dog never becomes really attached to a blind man.'

'That was the really astounding statement a dog expert made to me the other day. We were passing a blind man, standing at his usual corner, with his dog, with his usual cup round its neck.

"'Faithful little beggar!' I said, or something of that sort, to which my friend made the above reply.

"I asked him how he could prove that to be true, and, if so, why was it true. He asserted that a dog understands more than a man, else the eye of his master. And said, quite truly, that the dog, too, shipping his master, always looks into his face.

"Then I put the argument that a dog goes blind he surely is as much attached to his master as ever; that he will still maintain the affection and respect every nice dog has for its owner. I myself can remember a blind bulldog, whose affection for his master was wonderful and touching.

"The expert agreed that it was quite possible that a dog, always when he had gone blind, still has affection, but that it was impossible for a seeing dog, who had never seen the eye of his owner to be really attached to him. It would be faithful, willing slave, but there would not be the real deep-set affection.

"I searched in dog literature to see if it was possible to come by, and I have not seen this theory advanced anywhere.

"I thought that perhaps Shakespeare, that wonderful fount of knowledge, might have something to say on this subject, so I turned to the Concordance.

"But, alas, Shakespeare must, I fancy, not have been a great dog lover.

"It is rather surprising that the great poet should not have given us an unforgettable dog—though Launce's cur may stay in the memory, perhaps; but other English writers have helped to make up for his neglect.

"There was the noble dog of Llewellyn, Beth Gelert, though Prof. Mar Muller declared that the tale was an early Sanskrit myth.

"Tennyson, Cowper, Walter Scott, Matthew Arnold and many other poets have written beautiful things about dogs, and Edwin Landseer has surely given us dogs immortal."

Revival of Masonry.

Since the war, Masonry is experiencing a revival in Great Britain and most of the lodges have long waiting lists of candidates.

White Children Cannot Be Reared in West Africa On Account of the Climate

THE life of Englishwoman who follow their husbands—civil servants, officers, merchants—to the British colonies on the West Coast of Africa is described in the London Telegraph by Ethel and Alan Scherbridge. The outstanding fact of the situation, they say, is that the climate forbids the rearing of white children.

"Only in parts of Northern Nigeria," they write, "is it safe to risk the presence of a young white life, for there fresh milk is obtainable and the heat is not so trying. We have seen one white child in our travels. It was a sickly little thing, and apathy, its little legs, which should have been plump and sturdy, were merely sallow broomsticks. And this in spite of the most devoted and tender care. Truly, the life of a mother on the West Coast is no bed of roses!

"But it must not be thought that existence among the feminine element is a sad one. There are many wives who trek with their husbands into out-of-the-way portions of their districts and who enter into the discomforts and even dangers of the journey with positive zest.

"We recall one athletic, fair-haired girl who thought nothing of riding at four in the morning, slipping into a 'bush' skirt, breeches and field boots, and trudging along by her husband through hunters' paths until the rising sun compelled her to take to her hammock. She got monkey and parrot always traveled with her, and were as skilled at making themselves comfortable as she.

"Long practice had made her an adept at what might be called the 'multum in parvo' type of luggage, and she could always produce a dinner gown and accessories out of a microscopic bag when necessity required. When we asked her if she would not prefer to be in one of the large ports where bridge and dancing were the order of the evening she bluntly said that she was fed up with that sort of life and that she preferred to shoot for the pot rather than to chase golf balls, and to sleep the sleep of healthy fatigue in a palm leaf hut in the bush than to jazz to a gramophone until the early hours of the morning.

"That is one way of helping one's husband upon the coast. There is still another. It consists in doing most of his work for him until he sinks into the status of a cheerful nonentity and is known merely as 'Mrs. X.'s husband.' Masterful women there are in plenty all over the world, but nowhere is it so easy for a masterful woman to grasp the reins in her own hands as on this coast. Take the line of least resistance' is an insidious doctrine easy to adopt out here, and if the work is done, well, what matter whether Mr. or Mrs. X. is responsible?

"We have known wives who signed their husbands' official documents, others who seemed to forget that a woman should not take a military salute, and others who spoke of 'the soldier in my company.'. These women, as a rule, are not good housewives. They are short-tempered with the black boys, and are too interested in what is really not their province to pay attention to the duller problems of the home.

"We were taken to call at one house of this sort, where six bottles half full of flat, warm beer was the only refreshment available, and where our hostess wrathfully slapped the head boy for his neglect, though the fault was really her own.

"Black servants are quick to take their cue from their mistress, and if she is lax they become so likewise. Again, there are other women to be found who resent the presence of any increase among their own sex out here. They like to be the only ones in a community of attentive men, even though they may be devoted and loving wives.

"In their own country, unfortunately, the feminine element predominates, and they enjoy the novel sensation of being undisputed queens—even though their kingdoms may be small. One such was known contemptuously to refer to each new arrival as 'one more hussy,' until some one asked her what the others might perchance call her. There is also the butterfly wife, who, until she finds her soul through sorrow or illness, dances the hours away as though nature were not waiting to exact the inexorable penalty. For one cannot burn the candle at both ends with impunity on the West Coast, as men and women have both learnt. These little Undines usually realize their mistakes early and settle down into the best wives and mothers.

"Which brings us once more to the problem of children. Hard though it may be in India, it is still more bitter here. No white child must be born in these regions; no wise mother brings out with her a daughter under the age of eighteen or twenty. Therefore, she must make her election: shall she leave her children to the care of relatives, seeing them not from four to six months yearly, or shall she herself supervise their upbringing and be content with her husband's society only during his leave at home?

"Either way there are strings pulling at her heart. Either way there is anxiety and possible tragedy. The mail steamers are both longed for and dreaded, and sometimes these women a stranger might condemn as frivolous are actually pining day and night to provide an anodyne as they thought.

"Therefore, taking them as a whole, all honor to the women of the West Coast! One must not grudge them their small pleasures nor to too severe upon their weaknesses.

"Culling" Poultry.

Poultry culling demonstrations are being conducted throughout the province by the Extension Department of the Ontario Agricultural College. It is impossible for officials in charge of this work to cover all farm flocks, or even a fraction of them, therefore they are confining themselves to private exhibitions here and there and to the breeding stations situated in every county. "Culling" has now been proven nearly a necessity in poultry husbandry. This method of selection, when compared with trap nest records, has showed itself almost infallible in distinguishing boarders from layers. Contrary to general opinion, anyone with but a slight understanding of poultry work can become an expert culler after closely watching a demonstration conducted by the college authorities. Forty per cent. of the birds in Ontario do not produce enough eggs to pay for their keep. Were these fowl removed, egg production would scarce be affected, while feed bills would be cut almost in half.

Wealth In Strawberries.

"Twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of strawberries were harvested from a 20-acre field on the outskirts of Simcoe this season," claims W. L. Innes of the Dominion Canners. A seven-acre patch in the lot realized $10,000. Some of the beds were old and rather neglected, which reduced the average. "It should be remembered," added Mr. Innes, "that these figures represent wholesale prices, 14 cents per quart."

In Salisbury's Steps.

The Barnes magistrate who recently fined Mr. Winston Churchill for exceeding the speed limit have complained that the Chief Whip has been an unstamped Government envelope. One of the magistrates said that 'It was a free impost upon a private person," and the envelope should have been stamped.

But Mr. Churchill was merely exercising the privilege of a Minister of the crown. When the right of having correspondence "franked" was withdrawn from British M.P.'s an exception was made in the case of Cabinet Ministers, who can, if they choose, send all their letters unstamped.

The late Lord Salisbury had a remarkably expansive and feudal conception of his office as Prime Minister. His letters were always unstamped. But when he omitted to pay the railway fare to Hatfield, the Great Northern Railway timidly remonstrated. "I am the Prime Minister," was the simple retort. "Sue me you cannot," and for years the marquess used the railway as if created for his benefit. The story of Mr. Gladstone stopping the Irish express "in the Queen's name" is well known.

Trinidad Boasts Many Industries

TRINIDAD is the southernmost colony in the chain of West Indian Islands proper, being situated 10 degrees north of the Equator, between the 61st and 62nd degrees of west longitude. She is the second largest island of the group, and the most prosperous. She is rich in soil, vegetation, and minerals. Situated close to the mainland of South America, possessing extensive petroleum fields, and with modern facilities at Port of Spain for the handling of cargo, she has been singled out by the Committee on Shipping in the Caribbean after the war as the headquarters for West Indian shipping.

The "Land of the Humming Bird," as Trinidad was called by the Caribs who inhabited the island, was discovered by Christopher Columbus in 1498. Like Jamaica and the majority of the West Indian islands, Trinidad is mountainous, intersected with ravines and plains, all of which abound in luxuriant vegetation. The scenery is gorgeous. Above sunny skies, around the inland glades, palpitate hills rich foliage, avenues of palms. You marvel on nearing the little islands that rise seaward—the ill-starred expedition to the Eldorado—Guiana"; Raleigh attacked St. Josef, one of the coast towns of Trinidad, and burnt it. It was from close to her shores that Nelson chased the French fleet through the West Indies across the Atlantic to Trafalgar.

Trinidad contains 1,860 square miles and is 55 miles in length. Her industries are many; her population is about 400,000. Of this number one-third consists of East Indians.

About 1857 borings for petroleum were made by an American concern, but the venture was not successful. In 1866 another start was made at Brighton, and at a depth of 160 feet small deposits of oil were found, the weekly output being from 50 to 60 gallons. In 1901 Mr. Randolph Dust and others took upthe question, with the result that operations were commenced on extensive lines. Success crowned the efforts of those concerned. In the financial year 1914-15, 76,753,831 gallons of petroleum were handled. To-day there are at least 70 oil-wells in the colony, the product of each being from the heavy asphaltic to light oils. Refineries have been established to manufacture gasoline, kerosene, and other oils; and to-day the Trinidad product is being placed on the market of the neighboring islands. In 1917 35,805,-506 gallons of petroleum were exported; in 1918, 41,132,837 gallons; and in 1919, 46,017,819 gallons.

The increase of sugar in Trinidad is satisfactory. From 10,000 tons in the years gone by it has advanced steadily until last year the output was considerably over 50,000 tons. In the second year of the war, the sugar industry was worth to Trinidad more than one million sterling. Large quantities of molasses are exported, along with sugar, to Britain and Canada.

Trinidad cocoa has won its way to popular favor. In 1840, but 254 tons ware exported; in 1915 a high-water mark was reached, 24,000 tons being shipped to British markets at a price of at least two millions. Last year more than 24,000 tons were sent abroad. Trinidad produces cocoanuts by the million each season. Last year 50,000,000 nuts were exported.

Trinidad is the only colony in the Caribbean proper that possesses a floating dock and up-to-date repair plant, and a line of steamers owned in the colony.

The island is well provided with hotels, clubs, and golf links. The Savannah is the centre of gaiety at race meetings, cricket, or other sports which attract many persons to Port of Spain. Her rivers, pools, and waterfalls — the Diego Martin and Maracas falls, the Blue Basin with its beautiful cascade — in the midst of the most luxuriant tropical vegetation, are worth seeing. Being an agricultural colony, no effort is spared in the training of young men in matters relating to that industry. Agricultural societies preach the gospel of production and co-operation; an extensive Government stock farm is maintained, where cattle and horses of high grade are offered at public auction yearly. The botanical gardens, attached to the Agricultural Department, and a monastery on the hills, are among the institutions that have helped to advance agriculture, and it is the desire of the Government and people that a West Indian Agricultural College should be created here, to which not only lads from the Caribbean colonies but those of other tropical lands could be sent to learn scientific agriculture. Her railway system does its share in the development of trade; it is to be extended; water supply is to be provided for villages, and harbor works are to be undertaken at a cost of $2,500,000.

Butter Production.

It is stated that when the British Food Ministry investigated the cost of butter production, using nine Friesian farms for the purpose, they found that it cost a little over 98 cents to make a pound of butter. It probably does not cost that much to make butter in this country, for if it did we should not be buying it for 78 cents a pound; that is, if producers were aware of the cost. Without doubt, however, it costs much more than is generally supposed, and dairymen ought to take immediate measures to determine exactly what their product does cost them and to spread the information abroad. Consumers should pay for butter what it costs to produce, plus a reasonable profit, and if they could be sure they were paying this only there would be less dissatisfaction with present high prices.

Plant Needs Ration.

The plant needs a balanced ration. Study the special needs of the crop. If the crop is grown for bulk and top, such as grass and hay crops, nitrogen is the plant food to emphasize; on the other hand, if ripened grain is the product desired, emphasize phosphoric acid; for root crops, nitrogen and potash are the plant foods necessary to emphasize.

Mulching Garden Crops.

Mulching of garden crops with straw or strawy manure has been found to be a profitable practice for late summer culture by the department of horticulture at the Ohio Experiment Station.

Crops grown in inter-spaces, such as tomatoes and cabbage, are adapted to this form of mulching; this practice is often used after the garden crops are too large to cultivate easily.

Mulching is advised particularly because of the recent wet season, which has caused vegetables to grow heavy but tender stalks. The straw will tend to hold the moisture in the soil if a hot, dry season comes later in the summer. It also prevents the growth of weeds.

Gardeners point out that the excess supply of moisture in the soil has caused many of the garden crops to be shallow-rooted. Surface cultivation must necessarily be supplanted by mulching to provide moisture for dry spells.

Army Worm In Nova Scotia.

Immense damage was done to the crops of Nova Scotia by the army worm, which after an absence of six years, again invaded the province. Prof. Brittain, the provincial entomologist, made a personal visit to Lunenburg county and found the insect widely distributed along the south shore.

HOUSEWORK FOR MEN.

They May Now Invade the Women's Natural Sphere.

At the recent convention of the Association for the Advancement of Progressive Education, held in Washington, Angelo Patri strongly urged that boys should be taught to sew and cook.

In view of the difficulties of the servant problem and the growing elimination of women to occupy themselves with interests outside of the household, it is of obvious importance that the men-folks should be trained to proficiency in the domestic arts.

Hitherto the question, What is a woman's job? might have been answered by saying that it was anything too bothersome or too unpleasant for a man to undertake willingly. The man, being stronger and therefore able to compel obedience, has since prehistoric times required her to do all the housework and other drudgery.

But a sex revolution is in progress, and the prospect is that family arrangements will be different. The men may find themselves obliged to sew on the buttons, do the cooking and perhaps mind the children. With this likelihood in view it is of obvious importance that they should learn how to perform such tasks efficiently.

The notion that women are naturally cleverer than men where the domestic arts are concerned is without basis in fact. Men are more expert cooks. Who ever heard of a woman chef? Their needlework is better. In Oriental countries the skilled makers of embroideries and drawn-work are men. The housekeeping on board a warship far surpasses that of any woman-kep' house on land.

Experience has shown that men make admirable chambermaids; and nowadays male nurses do much of the work in hospitals. To suppose that men could not be taught how to take care of their own children is absurd; and, considering the rapid and overwhelmingly successful advance of the feminist movement, it is high time they learned.

Cure for Kicking Horse.

If a horse kicks in the stable from a mere vicious propensity one cure is to tie a truss of straw behind him, suspended from the ceiling by a cord, in order to give it full swing, letting the truss hang in a position where the horse's leg is likely to hit it. After the first night a horse is rarely known to kick again.
